BUSINESS MINUTE

Samantha Johnston spoke on two of her interests. One, she is a mortgage loan officer. The other is that she is a life coach and has her own business Next Level Insight. This second interest is her passion.

Our speaker, Daniel Seddiqui, is shown receiving the copy of the book plate.

Daniel set out to try and do 50 jobs in 50 states. The talk was his experiences along the way and what he learned. He went into this venture after failing 120 interviews after graduating from USC with a degree in economics. He also did this venture during the recent recession. Adaptability is one of the things he learned. Each week he had a job totally different from the previous week. He also learned to be adaptable in approaching people. Networking he found to be very helpful, especially in finding his next job. He also learned to be persistent. Endurance, in person and on the job was found to be important. He also learned he had to not be adverse to risk taking. The last major thing he learned was perseverance.

His experiences were amazing. He worked with the Border Patrol and was shown how the illegal drugs are smuggled into this country. He made cheese in Wisconsin. In Naperville, MS he worked in a health facility kitchen. Naperville is the most obese city in the nation where 98 percent of the people have diabetes.

For a week he worked in a meat packing plant. He spent a week working in a deep (underground) coal mine. He worked as a vet tech and assisted in delivering a colt. In Las Vegas he married some couples.

Interestingly, in every state he ended up living with a host family. He stated that 90 percent of Americans do not like their jobs—interesting.

Here is Jay Weber getting his Blue Badge. Congratulations.
