BUSINESS MINUTE

SPEAKER

Today's speaker, Anne Gross, was raised by a mother who had contracted polio at the age of two and was paralyzed from the waste down. Anne has a Ph.D. in psychology from Duke University. She has worked with individuals that have disabilities.

In 1985, after her mother had passed away, Anne received a package from her father. In the package was a collection of journals that her mother had written throughout her life talking about her disease and handicap. Anne didn't do anything with them except put them on a shelf in her basement after she had read them. After her father passed on, Anne and her brother went to the house in Pasadena where they had been raised to close up the house. In every room they looked they found additional journals their mother had written. They also found the outline of a book their mother had planned to write. Anne took the outline and wrote "The Polio Journals".

Anne's mother came down with paralytic polio in 1927 during the epidemic. Her mother was 2 1/2 years old when she contracted polio. It left her paralyzed from the waste down. (Note: There are three different types of polio virus and they affect the body differently for the person who contracts polio.)

When Anne was young, she and her mother went to Pixie Town, a local store. Her mother drove a specially equipped car. They had to park near the store entrance so her mother would not have to travel far in her wheel chair. While in the store, Anne recalled, a little girl looked at them with a look of "why are you in a wheel chair?".

Anne's mother spent a lot of time at Warm Springs, GA, the place founded by Franklin Roosevelt for individuals with polio. Following is a quote from Anne's book about Warm Springs.

"I remember the heady experience of freedom, no longer confined by my braces or wheelchair, no longer confined by my crippledness-a glorious feeling of mastery, of being in full charge of my body which responded magically, miraculously to every motion I wanted to make. Above the water, under the water, in the air as I went diving-flying-from the sitting position on a diving board into my wondrous world of water world. The ecstasy of movement for sake of movement, swift and sure and unfettered."

Anne's mother became a professional harp-sichordist. She started playing the piano, but being a paraplegic she had no ability to use the pedals on a piano. A harpsichord does not have pedals. She played a Carnegie Hall. She gave up her career after about 40 years.

Many people with polio will develop what is called Post Polio Syndrome after about 30 to 40 years from the initial onset of polio.

Anne's mother, unfortunately, was one who developed post polio syndrome. Some of the symptoms are exhaustion, muscle weakness, and painful joints.

(Note: Many people who have non-paralytic polio can also develop post polio syndrome. The syndrome can cause paralysis, the same as paralytic polio. The polio virus resides in a person's lungs throughout their lives.)

“One thing that made my childhood experiences different from those of others is that my mother has always been paralyzed by polio from the waist down. I never have thought of her as being ‘crippled’-the very word seems foreign and unjust to me. My mother lives a very normal, well adjusted life.

“I, like my mother, felt her paralysis was a shameful thing.”

Shame was the biggest thing Anne felt with her mother being paralyzed.

ON THIS DAY IN HISTORY

At 11:30 a.m. on May 29, 1953, Edmund Hillary of New Zealand and Tenzing Norgay, a Sherpa of Nepal, become the first explorers to reach the summit of Mount Everest, which at 29,035 feet above sea level is the highest point on earth. The two, part of a British expedition, made their final assault on the summit after spending a fitful night at 27,900 feet. News of their achievement broke around the world on June 2, the day of Queen Elizabeth II's coronation, and Britons hailed it as a good omen for their country's future.
